Four 76.2-mm AA guns were still in well-camouflaged emplacements on Ettersberg.

2. The eastern section of the Tannenberg Kaserne, consisting of four barracks buildings, one mess building, and several garages, was occupied by 100 to 120 soldiers with red-bordered black epaulets. No training activity was observed. Only six windows on the street front were lighted at dusk. The central section of the Tannenberg Kaserne, consisting of three barracks buildings, one mess building, and several garages, was occupied by about 300 soldiers wearing red-bordered black epaulets, some with motor transport insignia. No regular training activity was observed. Up to 40 motor vehicles were parked in the yard, others in the garages. The unit stationed there furnished motor vehicles to other units at the post.

Truck [redacted] left the installation on 5 December, carrying six soldiers. On 9 December, 40 soldiers were seen at rifle drill in the barracks yard while about 80 soldiers marched toward the Luetzendorff Estate, carrying rifles and submachine guns. Groups of from 5 to 10 men with telephone equipment appeared to be holding a telephone exercise in the Bittersberg area on 9 December. Truck [redacted] occupied by two soldiers with black epaulets, stood in a patch of woods in that area. The western section of the Luetzendorff Kaserne consisted of six barracks buildings, one mess building and several garages. A hospital was still located there and some of the billets were still occupied by officers. However, dependents were no longer seen in the billeting area. The garages were cleared of PX merchandise by about 30 soldiers on 9 December.
